

Leading in a Time of Change: Seizing Opportunities to Create a Smarter Government

Thank you for registering for the June 29th Web seminar.

Date: Monday, June 29, 2009

Time: 1p.m. EDT

We are at a time of enormous change and opportunity. Every natural system, object, process or service can be interconnected, instrumented, and intelligent. The digital and physical worlds are converging. This is leading to new opportunities for progress - for new ways to create a better, smarter government. Smarter systems can make a material difference to the health of the global economy, the health of our planet, and the health and prosperity of global society. Governments, and specifically you, the government leaders, program managers and influencers must lead this change. How do you do it? What can you do in your department or agency or organization? What can you change about how you meet your mission, and serve your citizens?

As a leader in the government, join IBM Chairman Emeritus Irving Wladawsky-Berger in this conversation and come away with:

- New thinking about how you can lead your organization to be more efficient, productive and responsive to citizens
- New energy and resolve to think and act in new ways to solve your toughest problems
- New vision for the future of your organization and the future of our global society
